The University of South Dakota Department of Communication Sciences & Disorders M.A. in Speech-Language Pathology residential program offers a 2-year, federally funded scholar support award (at least $18,000 tuition and fees + additional financial support for expenses related to professional education) available through its PACE-i scholars program.

We encourage students with an interest in providing services as a speech therapist in early intervention settings to apply.

Following receipt of the M.A. in Speech-Language Pathology degree, there is a service commitment for PACE-i scholars that includes providing SLP services to infants, toddlers, and children receiving special education, related, or early intervention services.
